Excerpt: .love, and the merits of a crucified and triumphant Saviour. It is invested with a lustre which brightens the habitations of heaven, and beams immortal day through all the abodes of mortality. It unveils and exhibits an excellence, a beauty, a grandeur, a majesty, perfectly, unequivocally, and substantially divine. Such is the genius and tendency of that religion which offers pardon to the guilty, and confers immortality on dying creatures. Conscious imperfection and depravity is a sentiment which haunts the best of us like a ghost. We cannot go where the secret and powerful workings of conscience will not seize our apprehensions, and a thousand criminal imbecilities, preferences, and omissions, rise in solemn and awful remembrance. remembrance against us. With death, judgment, and eternity staring us in the face, an understanding clouded with ignorance and deranged with appetite and passion, a life tarnished and chequered with vice, and an heart labouring and oppressed with fear, what would we not give to be at peace with God and our own minds, to be rescued from the bitter pangs of remorse, and the teasing inquietudes of uncertainty, and to be prepared for entering on another world with solid tranquillity and confidence? What shall we do to be saved? or wherewith shall we come before the Lords are questions of the most indispensable necessity and importance, and in the solution of which every individual is r deeply interested. From this great, this final, this impartial, and universal...
