On July 21st, in pursuance of orders, he sailed from Madras in the Suffolk, Captain Robert Lambert, with the Centurion, 50, Captain Samuel Osborn, and some transports with troops under Colonel James Stuart, to make an attempt against the Dutch possessions in Ceylon. At the same time he detached the Resistance, 44, Captain Edward Pakenham, with a tender and a transport, to reinforce a little expedition which, under Captain Henry Newcome, of the Orpheus, 32, had previously sailed against Malacca. On July 23rd, off Negapatam, Eainier was joined by the Diomedc, 44, Captain Matthew Smith (1), and one or two more transports, with additional troops, and on August 1st, after having been joined on the previous day by the Heroine, 32, Captain Alan Hyde Gardner, he anchored in Back Bay. Two days were expended in negotiations, and on the third day, while the Diomedc was working into the bay with a transport in tow, she unfortunately struck on an uncharted rock, and went down with all her stores. But the troops were landed on August 3rd, four miles from Trincomale, without opposition. By the 23rd, it was found possible to open the British batteries, and by the 26th, a practicable breach was effected. A summons was then sent in, and, after some discussion and misunderstanding, the place surrendered, with 679 officers and men, and nearly 100 serviceable guns. This conquest cost a loss to the British and East India Companys...
