I begged them to have it trapped, and, until the trap was procured, to keep the hole always closely covered with a folded wet cloth. Next day the patient was for the first time slightly improved; and from this date recovery slowly took place. The fever lasted about sixteen days. Care was taken to see that the sink-hole was kept closed. Convalescence was slow; and the patient remained weak for some time. Cases XXI. and XXII.--In a house near Shooter s-hill, a womanservant was attacked with remittent fever, on the 3d of February 1858, during a rapid thaw. On the 5th she seemed recovering. On the 6th she was again attacked, and continued ill until the 10th (or 7th day), when an improvement took place. On the 12th of February (or 9th day) she was convalescent. About ten weeks afterwards a man-servant in the same house was attacked similarly, but more severely. His illness lasted ten or twelve days, leaving much debility. On the 8th of May he was sent into the country for change of air, and returned much improved on the 21st. On the 3d of June, the weather being very hot, he was again attacked with fever, which lasted forty-eight hours. After this, recovery proceeded without further interruption. The drainage of this house was not good. The drinkingwater was procured from...
