Reviews

The publication is simple in go through preferable to fully grasp. I am quite late in start reading this one, but better then never. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.

Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Gas Treatment for Scale Insects To the researches of American investigators and the experiences of her fruit growers is due the credit for great improvements in insecticidal washes now used in many different parts of the world; and to the same source we owe the introduction of hydrocyanic acid gas for the destruction of scale insects in the orchard. The expediency of a gas as an insecticide for scale insects on citrus and other evergreen trees arises from the practical impossibility of reaching all the insects with a liquid on any but small trees; invariably, some escape destruction on large trees and these become the nuclei of new colonies of the insects, which soon become as great a pest as before. The destruction of insects by fumigation with poisonous gases or vapours has long been carried on in greenhouses; but that the process could be economically practised in orchards remained to be demonstrated in California little more than a decade ago. In the first report of the Board of State Horticultural Commissioners of California, published in 1882, unsuccessful experiments with steam to destroy scale insects on tent-covered trees without injury to the foliage are recorded by Commissioner S. F. Chapin. A few years later, Alexander Craw, the present entomologist of the California State Board of Horticulture, and Mr. J. W. Wolfskill carried on many experiments with a number of different gases. The work of these gentlemen impressed D. W. Coquillett, then a special agent of the Division of Entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture, and the three united their efforts. Mr. Coquillett soon discovered the value of hydrocyanic acid gas for the purpose....
