Excerpt: . as a pictorial arrangement, a portrayal of humanity, and a colouristic achievement, is an indisputable masterpiece, and perhaps the most important and most mature work in all Norwegian painting. It is the first warm day of Spring. The young girl s invalid chair has been placed by the open window, and, languidly reclining on the pillows, she sits and breathes the air that sighs through the room. A light breeze laden with the fragrance of the fields at this moment fills the window curtain, so that it swells like a sail. As if in gratitude the glance of the convalescent is directed toward her aged mother, who is seated knitting close by, and who eagerly scans the expression on the invalid s countenance. No words are uttered, but the silence is full of quivering expectation, while the vernal sunshine floods every corner of...
